Dedicated Research Experience

Centers for Disease Control and Prevention,

Atlanta, GA 2013

Student Researcher, Sherri Stewart, Ph.D. - Supervisor

Conducted wide-scale content analysis of state programs for worksite wellness cancer programs and assisted with drafting a call to action for the prevention of skin cancer for Surgeon General of the United States Boris D. Lushniak, M.D., M.P.H.

University of TN Health Science Center, Department of Pathology, Memphis, TN 2014-2012

Student Researcher, Andrzej Slominski, M.D., Ph.D. - Supervisor

Evaluated the potential cytoprotective role of melatonin derivatives on human keratinocytes and melanocytes exposed to ultraviolet radiation.

Joslin Diabetes Center - Harvard Medical School,

Boston, MA 2011

NIDDK Research Fellow, Thomas Serwold, Ph.D. - Supervisor

Researched a method for cloning and transfer of T-cell receptor genes into a reporter cell line to evaluate antigens involved in the pathophysiology of type 1 diabetes mellitus.

The University of Memphis, Memphis, TN 2008 to 2006

Student Researcher, Judith Cole, Ph.D. - Supervisor
Demonstrated that tick salivary gland extract inhibits growth factor-stimulated ERK activity and minimizes the wound healing response. Data supported our conclusion that ticks can suppress the host's wound healing mechanisms. Constituents in tick salivary gland extract may promote tick attachment by suppressing the wound healing response. The fact that the effects of salivary gland extract on injury- and growth factor-stimulated ERK activity are not cell-type specific suggests the intriguing possibility that constituents in tick saliva might be useful in controlling the migration of many cell types, including invasive cancer cells.

The Mayo Clinic, Rochester, MN 2006

Summer Undergraduate Research Fellow, Nicholas LaRusso, M.D. - Supervisor
Investigated autosomal recessive polycystic kidney disease and characterized adenylyl cyclases 5,6, and 8 in normal and disease model rodents in collaboration with senior researchers.
